ON ASSISTING NATURE The secret of living healthily lies in attending to Nature's ways—in living in conformity with Nature's livas. Nature will not allow you to neglect her except at your peril. She demands that you will work in harmony with her, assist her intelligently and to she best of your power. When Nature required assistance, she will not be slive in conveying to you an intention of the fact. Deckine of centry, inability to sleep well, headache, bilous-new, convigation, a general elugrication of mind and body-shean are some of the eight sheat all is not well with your physical system. Vour first care should be to attend to the dispersion. It is there that things are itable to that poing weng. Any sign of digrative "threat" should impel you to reek the nid of a reliable untilizing an effective her aid of a reliable untilized on willout delay. There is no better no surre-mo signs—thus feecham's pills—that spown remedy which has secured the confidence of the public in many lands. When Nature requires agent-name—take

If we regard it however, as merely a part of a decisive test of endurance in which ultimate victory will rest with the side which best conserves its strangth, the French inferentiation is less vedcome as reducing—though probably to a slight extent only—the mass of strategic reserves which General Foch holds in hand. The general position from this longer point of view is apily communication which we sprint elsswhere with the side with the Association. Just offer must be appared in the authoritative communication which we sprint elsswhere with the halfed with the Richies of Waterloo, when the British Army we being hammered by the cheany with Blücher was marching to the battlefield. We may will conceive the battle as a Waterloo immensely magnified both in typace and in time. The function of the British Army, upon which falls the main weight of the German effort, is to hold fast and exhaust the enemy's strength, as it did at Waterloo, until the time common. In the function of the success of the chesses making should fast and exhaust the enemy's line of the conducted under the provincion as the Germans had drained their strength by their coastly battering and the offensive screened with the Somme offensive; and that offensive succeeded in exact provincion as the Germans had drained their strength by their coastly battering and the chosen moment the British Army item to support the arduous role of defence under the most it is the British Army view that the support the arduous role of defence under the most it is the British Army view the support the arduous role of defence under the most it is the British Army view the support the arduous role of defence under the most it is the British Army view the support the arduous role of defence under the most it is the British Army view the support the arduous role of defence under the most it is the British Army view the support the arduous role of defence under the most it i twenty-six divisions which the Germans have thrown into the battle in Picardy and Flanders: If the British defence must gradually approach exhaustion, so, and more rapidly, must the German attack, while all the time the defence of the passive parts of the enemy's line is steadily wearing thin. SECOND READING IN THE LORDS, PROGRESS.

The Press Association is able to state, on the authority of a personage who returned from the battle-front on Tuesday night, that the situation on Tuesday was regarded as undustedly very anxious. The Germans had taken Bailleul, and ind entered Meteren and taken Bailleul, and ind entered Meteren and wytschaete, had attacked with four fread divisions, with parts of other divisions, and were metither side of Bailleul. Had the enemy naintained that pressure, bringing up fread roops at the same rate, there would have been recat danger to the vital ridge of the heights, thich is the backbone of our defence in the orthern region.
